The HyperMotion engine is also used to adapt the game to the specific global and regional topologies of the universes, as well as to deal with the huge number of possible global placements of goalposts and goal line. "The entire team at EA FIFA, including our FIFA developers, are delighted to be the first to achieve this milestone and take full advantage of this technology, which is a key part of FIFA's gameplay innovation," said David Rutter, Senior Producer at EA SPORTS. "We are confident that this new performance engine will improve the gameplay quality of FIFA as well as provide us with a platform for real-time game development and player performance, giving us a huge competitive advantage in delivering an improved gameplay experience in FIFA 22." Powered by the TrueMotion engine, the most advanced FIFA engine in history, FIFA 20 included a new ground-up ground system with first-of-its kind physics, ball-gathering and ground-placement. This new ground system was the result of innovations from the TrueMotion Engine lead engineers in Vancouver and the in-house FIFA developers in Stockholm, as well as the creative input and feedback from the FIFA and EA SPORTS development teams throughout the process. "We are extremely excited that we have completed our ambitious work on the ground system and that we are the first team on the planet to use the TrueMotion engine's unprecedented ground system," said Alen Smailagic, Lead Engineer on FIFA. "We believe the results on FIFA 20 show the amazing power of the TrueMotion engine, and we look forward to bringing this same engine power to FIFA 22." For the first time, the Virtual Pro team has also created enhanced ground physics for the stadiums. Players feel more grounded while performing certain actions, such as diving or rolling, and all actions now have more realistic tension effects as well. FIFA 20 also featured the introduction of the first-ever game-changing piece of gameplay content - live and dynamic player weighting in-game. Additionally, FIFA has been completely overhauled for a brand-new Player Intelligence engine that can learn from a player's behavior and inputs. In the case of Calum Chambers, an excellent example of this was the player's ability to use both his speed and technique to beat multiple players 1v1. In the new Power Ratings system, players have more complete data about their on-field performance. This includes

HOW THE FIRST FIFA 20 GAME SUSPENDED PLAYERS Last summer FIFA introduced rules that would automatically suspend players who received two consecutive yellow cards in a FIFA game. FIFA 20 not only continues this system, but goes further by also suspending players who get two yellow cards in a row for a player. The question is... does this help game stability or cause the already strained relationships between many of the player's unions and FIFA? Addressing the issue is one of the things that several members of the European soccer family of federations have been especially critical of. While, the game was always enjoyable with lots of lads and women playing together, the game could sometimes just become unplayable for large groups if two or three players were just being intentionally greedy when it came to cards. What's the point? A player can, and has been, suspended in the game if they play smart. Why suspend them with the conditions being that they are intentionally being greedy? If you are suspending players for the mistake of being greedy in the past then this new system does not fit with where the game is heading. I'm hearing that this could be a major issue in the upcoming season of the E
